HALIBUTER HIT SUBMERGED LOG

The local halibuter Dacia returned yesterday, leaking quite badly around the stem. Night before last, while on Nantucket Shoals, the craft ran head on into an unseen obstruction, believed to have been a log, and opened up her stem quite badly. She was headed back for port and hauled on Burnham's railways for repairs.

LOCAL SPLITTERS WELL SUPPLIED

DRAGGERS BROUGHT A FAIR AMOUNT OF FISH FROM BOSTON.

Local splitters received a fair supply of fresh fish yesterday afternoon and this morning, several of the draggers coming from Boston with a portion of fares reported there yesterday. The dragger Elizabeth and Ruth, which developed engine trouble, cut short her trip and arrived this morning with a small fares of haddock. Two truck loads of fish about 40,000 pounds in all, came from Groton, Conn., late last night for the Gorton-Pew Company. Gill netters found good fishing yesterday, 18 boats landing 40,000 pounds.

MODERN LIGHT NOW SHINES AT WELLFLEET

Washington, D. C., April 16.—One hundred and nine years of history are back of the announcement by the Commerce Department that Billingsgate Light in Wellfleet Harbor, Cape Cod Bay, has just been established.

The first Billingsgate light, according to the Commerce Department, was built upon the same small island in 1822 to aid local fishermen to safely reach port and was an arrangement of eight oil lamps with crude reflectors. It served faithfully until 1922, just 100 years after it was first established, and was then discontinued.

The Federal Government has now erected on the site of the old safety beacon a modern, up-to-date automatic signal and where the old oil lamps used to shine, a powerful beacon now serves as a guide for mariners. The new light was established at the request of New England shippers.
